

Celestica Receives Frost & Sullivan's 2012 Global EMS Aerospace and Defense Company of the Year Award

March 25, 2013 10:09 PM EDT

TORONTO, March 25, 2013 /PRNewswire/ - Celestica Inc. (NYSE: CLS) (TSX: CLS), a global leader in the delivery of end-to-end product lifecycle solutions, today announced it has received Frost & Sullivan's 2012 Global EMS Aerospace and Defense (A&D) Company of the Year Award.

Frost & Sullivan presented this award to Celestica for demonstrating excellence in a number of areas, including growth strategy and implementation, innovation with products and technology, and leadership in customer value.

Frost & Sullivan acknowledged Celestica for its achievements in moving beyond the traditional definition of an EMS provider and emerging as an innovative supply chain solutions partner. Frost & Sullivan's research revealed that Celestica's customer-focused approach, dedicated A&D centers of excellence and ability to evolve with A&D industry dynamics brings its customers true value.

"Celestica's position within the EMS market for Aerospace & Defense has been elevated by its ability to truly understand its customers' unique risks and requirements and help them overcome challenges in their marketplace," said Lavanya Rammohan, Analyst, Frost & Sullivan. "Through its dedicated centers of excellence and supply chain expertise, Celestica has been able to create a new level of competitive benchmarking in the EMS A&D market."

"We are very proud to accept this award from Frost & Sullivan," said Michael McGuire, Vice President, Aerospace and Defense, Celestica. "This is a reflection of the depth of our A&D knowledge and expertise, as well as our number one market share position for EMS in the A&D segment. Our global teams remain focused on continuing to deliver the highest quality and innovative products and solutions that meet our customers most demanding and critical requirements."
